It may be Peace on Earth and Goodwill Toward Men, except where it comes to thousands of abducted, sexually-abused, and enslaved children around the world. ... In 2007, this editor investigated the child prostitution trade in Southeast Asia and visited Thailand and Cambodia to witness how vulnerable children as young as five are kidnapped and pressed into service as prostitutes. Worse, the trade in children is supported and sanctioned by members of the US and other diplomatic corps members in various Southeast and South Asian capitals. ... The following photograph has been obtained by WMR. It was recently sent anonymously to Noreen Gosch, whose then-12-year old son Johnny was kidnapped from a West Des Moines street in 1982. 1982 was the same year that this editor, working covertly for the FBI and Naval Investigative Service, helped bust a huge pedophile ring that was later determined to have been linked to high White House officials. The network would receive widespread attention during the waning days of the Reagan administration and result in front page coverage by the Washington Times during the Bush 41 administration."
- OrganicConsumer "Pioneer Hi-Bred's website boasts that their genetically modified (GM) Liberty Link corn survives doses of Liberty herbicide, which would normally kill corn. The reason, they say, is that the herbicide becomes "inactive in the corn plant." They fail to reveal, however, that after you eat the GM corn, some inactive herbicide may become reactivated inside your gut and cause a toxic reaction. In addition, a gene that was inserted into the corn might transfer into the DNA of your gut bacteria, producing long-term effects. These are just a couple of the many potential side-effects of GM crops that critics say put the public at risk." Lerman

Companies in the report were evaluated on a 0 to 100 scale. ConAgra scored a total of 4 points, the lowest of any of the food companies rated. 2] in 2002, ConAgra, together with other major food and beverage companies including PepsiCo, General Mills, Kellogg, Sara Lee, and H.J. Heinz Co., spent heavily to defeat Oregon's measure 27, which would have required food companies to label products that contain genetically modified ingredients. 3] According to the Oregon Secretary of State, ConAgra contributed $71,000 to the campaign to defeat the ballot initiative. 4] establish 1922,

In accordance with this Precautionary Principle, we call for a moratorium on the planting of all genetically engineered crops and the release of all GEOS into the environment,

- ENN "Here's the background you need to understand: The primary product used to control grubs on your lawn, or insects on your fruit trees, or termites in your basement, contains a chemical compound known as imidacloprid, a synthetic nicotine, which is most commonly marketed as Merit. No one debates that imidacloprid is toxic to bees, yet Bayer, the exclusive patent holder from 1988 until this year, denies its product causes CCD. Many countries including France and Brazil are employing the "precautionary principle" and pulling products containing imidacloprid from the shelves. But in the U.S., homeowners and farms are using more and more of it — especially since many competing products (which relied on the compound diazinon to kill grubs and other insects) have already been banned due to their proven toxicity."

- notes: In the U.S., the Legion has led an almost subterranean existence in Connecticut since the mid-1960s. Very little was known about the order until the early 1990s, when a Hartford Courant journalist, Gerald Renner, attempted to interview Fr. Anthony Bannon, the Legion's National Director, for a story on the Legionary seminary. Bannon's unexpected refusal to talk piqued Renner's interest, and he began to look more closely at the order ... The charges against Fr. Maciel involve nine men (one now dead), all former Legionaries. For some, the alleged abuse began when they were barely 12 years of age, and continued until the men were in their mid-20s. Much of the abuse took place in Mexico, Spain, and Italy. Two of the men, Mexican Fr. Juan Vaca and Spanish Fr. Félix Alarcón, served the Legion in America. Fr. Alarcón opened the Legion of Christ center in Connecticut in 1965 and Fr. Vaca served for five years as the U.S. Legion Director before leaving the order. Three of the nine filed a canonical suit against Maciel and have been waiting years for it to be heard. (The Legion, of course, denies all charges against Maciel. See legionaryfacts.org.)

The men, seven Mexicans and two Spaniards, described themselves as former members of a favored group, known as the "apostolic schoolboys." The abuse allegedly occurred over three decades beginning in the 1940s in Spain and Italy, where boys and young men were taken for schooling. The abuse, they said, involved some 30 boys and young men and extended over at least three decades. Fr Maciel and the organization deny the accusations. According to the ReGain organization, as many as 24 men have come forward with accusations of sexual abuse against Fr. Maciel. Fr Maciel and the organization continue to deny the accusations. The liable Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith (CDF), lead by then Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, examined the allegations.

Opus Dei received massive unwanted publicity through the work of Dan Brown, whose bestselling novel, The Da Vinci Code, features a penetrating probe of the peculiar and obnoxious practices of the cult. Rumours linking Cardinal Ratzinger to the flagellation cult and its suspicious excesses have been in circulation for more than a decade.

Subsequently, West would be accused of sexual abuse by two boys not connected with Morning Star Boys' Ranch but accusations would surface that West, a Spokane county sheriff deputy at the time of the claimed sexual abuse, and his partner, David Hahn, had access to boys at the Morning Star Boys' Ranch and were allowed to take boys away from the home for outings and overnight trips; accusations West denied. David Hahn committed suicide in August 1981 after accusations surfaced that he had molested two boys.

GM Pollen, toxic cloud, genetically modified corn, soy beans, rape

Food Safety, KSU.edu Farmers help deliver modified crops to Brazil October 14, 2003 New York Times Tony Smith Brazil's decision in late

September to legalize the planting of genetically modified soybeans may have infuriated environmentalists and some in the government, but, according to this story, it has caused much rejoicing and relief in the farming community here in Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil's southernmost state, where farmers have been planting transgenic soybeans illegally for years. Rafael Moreno, 30, a resident of this sleepy town close to the Argentine border who for the last four years has been planting and harvesting genetically engineered soybeans on his 1,000-acre farm, was quoted as saying, "Everybody around here was doing it and it made economic sense, so I did it, too." The story says that the realities and the fact that Brazil - already the world's No. 2 soybean producer, after the United States - is working hard to become an agricultural superpower are crucial factors behind President Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva's changed stance on the planting of genetically modified crops. Before taking office in January, Mr. da Silva opposed such crops. But now that he heads the government, he has to weigh the growing importance of agribusiness, which accounted for a third of the country's gross domestic product and 40 percent of its exports last year. Farmers here expect the president's decision, which legalized transgenic crops for this planting season, to pave the way for more permanent legislation that would put them on an equal footing with farmers in the United States, Argentina and Canada, where gene-altered crops have been planted for years.

Contamination fears to restrict GM crop trials October 14, 2003 Times Newspapers Ltd./ Telegraph.co.uk Stringent new conditions are, according to these stories, to be imposed on any future genetically modified crop trials in Britain as research shows that GM pollen can spread to crops 16 miles away, eight times further than previously thought. The stories say that a study also found that after growing GM oilseed rape, it could take a farmer up to 16 years to grow a conventional rape crop that would comply with the maximum 1 per cent GM contamination threshold. The stories explain that the findings were released by the Department for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs just three days before the results of the official farm trials and as about 1,000 anti-GM campaigners protested against the technology in Central London. Opponents of GM crops immediately hailed the findings as proof that the controversial process would damage the environment and dent farm profits. The researchers were cited as finding that bees could carry GM pollen distances of 16 miles, and unless weeds from GM crops were strictly controlled, conventional crops risked contamination for up to 16 years, they concluded. A Whitehall source was cited as admitting that the results might put extra pressure on senior ministers not to rush into widespread commercial planting of GM crops, suggested that it would increase caution inside the Government and that the most likely outcome was for decisions on GM crops to be made on individual cases. Elliot Morley, the Environment Minister, was cited as signalling a harder line to companies when he insisted that in any future trial the purity of seeds would be closely inspected, adding, "We are determined to have effective systems in place to ensure consumer choice whatever the future of GM in this country. It is a global product and we must have systems of control to ensure seed purity and consumer choice." A spokesman for the industry group The Supply Chain Initiative for the Modification of Arable Crops was cited as saying that the risk of pollen travelling long distances was very small and the research showed it was possible for GM and non-GM crops to be grown in the same farming regions without any detrimental effects, adding, "The whole case of co-existence between crops in agriculture revolves around the concept of thresholds. Farming takes place in the open air and practical thresholds are achievable." Bob Fiddaman, a spokesman for the National Farmers' Union, who tested GM oilseed rape on his 1,100-acre farm in Hertfordshire, was quoted as saying, "After the first crop, farmers would always control weeds." The stories note that on Thursday the UK Government will publish results of field-scale trials of GM crops. They are expected to show a deterioration in farmland biodiversity among at least two of the three GM crops. Pete Riley, GM campaigner at Friends of the Earth, was quoted as saying, "If GM contamination cannot be controlled on test sites, what hope is there if GM crops are widely grown?"

The resignation came on the eve of the World Economic Forum meeting in Davos, which played a role in its creation a decade ago. A dinner for the public-private fund is planned Thursday with U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon and major backers Bill Gates and the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation. The breakup resulted from an internal review to address problems highlighted in Associated Press stories last year about the loss of tens of millions of dollars in grant money because of mismanagement and alleged fraud. Its biggest private donor is the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, which has pledged $1.15 billion and provided it with $650 million so far. <http://goo.gl/bqXs8> 1/25/12 (Papua New Guinea) Bank South Pacific (BSP) chairman Kostas Constantioun resigned as a director of the Board of Bank of South Pacific Limited and its subsidiaries. <http://goo.gl/vh3az> 1/25/12 (UK) SOFIA PROPERTY FUND LIMITED, Gerry Williams has resigned as a Director, following his resignation from Ardel Holdings Limited ("Ardel") where he was CEO.
